Substack.com

If you are not familiar with this online resource, we share links to three authors (or, “content creators” in the current parlance). Substack is a place where people can publish essays, daily journals, or occasional musings. Today there are audio recordings and video streams as well. Readers and viewers may “subscribe” to a particular author's posts for free. Or, they may help support the author by paying a monthly subscription fee for as little as $5 per month.

Here are three different styles of using Substack: a historian’s daily letter, a journalist’s video stream, and an activist’s 6-days/week list of progressive actions.

Heather Cox Richardson - A historian who has become a celebrity through her “Letters from an American,” an almost daily letter since the start of the first Trump Administration, documenting primarily presidential events in the USA, including the Biden Administration and through to today. She is also on Facebook and Youtube, but the written letters are the original way she expressed herself.

Jim Acosta - A journalist and former network anchor. Jim now “broadcasts” via his own home studio on Substack. His videos are primarily in an interview format. Earlier this week he interviewed former Transportation Secretary Pete Buttigieg and House Minority Leader Hakeem Jefferies in the same 1-hour show. Look it up!

Chop Wood, Carry Water - A weekday newsletter from Jessica Craven. She provides easy, effective political actions to stave off despair, effect positive change and elect true public servants. Her tone is upbeat and positive, especially her “Extra! Extra!” newsletter on Sundays that look back at the previous week.
